

President's Message

By Sarah Bell

R.E.A.C.T.

As you become secure in your value as a real estate professional, you start to realize you may not be everyone's "cup of tea." And the more secure you become, the less you desire to be everything to everyone. You'll be perceived differently by different people and by the interactions you have while you practice the craft of real estate. To some people, you'll be the best thing since sliced bread. To others, you may be the agent who never answers their phone. And the truth is, it's hard to always be on for everyone. I know I've had some interactions where I didn't shine my brightest light. Although I still feel like I could've done things differently, I had to forgive myself and move on. Just strive to work on yourself and your reactions. You can't control everything and everyone around you, but you can control how you react.

He who blames others has a long way to go on his journey. He who blames himself is halfway there. He who blames no one has arrived.
